Yet another great news concerning my (little) involvement with Google. I have written few weeks ago about being accepted to the Google Summer of Code 2011 with the project on matrix factorizations techniques in data mining for the Orange platform. Nevertheless, Google has announced Google Anita Borg Scholarship Recipients and Finalists, a Scholarship for which I have applied this year and I am among 147 undergraduate and graduate students worldwide being chosen. Just for clarification - this is completely unrelated to the GSoC (the only common denominator being the Google itself), the scholarship however being awarded based on the strength of candidates♦ academic performance, leadership experience and demonstrated passion for computer science.Scholars from Europe have Scholars' Retreat at European Google centre at Zurich in June and I am very much looking forward to this event to meet some fascinating people. The retreat will include workshops, speakers, panelists, breakout sessions and social activities scheduled over a couple of days.  <ul> <li> (Official Google Blog with published results of the Scholars's selection process) link</li> <li> (Official Google Students Blog with published announcement of the Scholars's) link</li> <li> (Faculty News) link in Slovene</li> </ul>
